

The Smart Way to Send Your Child to Study in Australia

Welcome Message

From the Founders of Education Pathways to Australia (EPTA): We've spoken with hundreds of families who worry about sending their children abroad too early. From visa stress to culture shock, there's a lot that traditional international education routes leave to chance. This guide was written to help you understand your options — and to introduce a safer, smarter pathway that keeps your child supported from start to graduation.

The Traditional Route: Promise and Pressure

Many families believe the only path to a top Australian degree is by sending their child overseas immediately after high school. But direct entry often involves:

High Upfront Costs

Airfare, visas, relocation, living expenses, and full international fees (often $40K+ per year).

Cultural Adjustment Pressure

New country, no local family, unfamiliar academic style.

No Safety Net

If things go wrong, students are often left on their own.

The EPTA Pathway: Mapped, Measured, Supported

Through EPTA, your child begins their journey at a respected partner university in India, studying a degree program that's mapped to Australian first-year content. Here's how it works:

Honest FAQ's

Is this an Australian degree?

Your child will study a program that matches first-year content of an Australian degree, preparing them for direct entry into second year in Australia.

What if their visa is denied?

We've planned for that. Your child can continue seamlessly at the Indian university, completing their degree without delay – with potential transfer options later.

Will they be alone in Australia?

Absolutely not. EPTA staff meet them on arrival, guide them to their accommodation, and support them for six weeks through mentorship and community-building.

Can they work part-time?

We've planned for that. Your child can continue seamlessly at the Indian university, completing their degree without delay – with potential transfer options later.
